After two months, they finally voted the plans out by five votes to four - their reasons included an objection to the height of the pyramid and the effect it would have on the view of the city, the loss of trees in the meadow and the huge shadow it would cast over most of Oxford. Male speaker We were n't entirely surprised. But when I think it would have been just eight years from completion now, up to a height of about 400 feet, I think it's sad we did n't get permission to build it. Read in studio Voice over Good Evening: ANNE DAWSON A driving examiner has been found guilty of indecently assaulting four women while they were taking their tests. Clinton Hadley is expected to be sentenced tomorrow, for what the judge described as a clear case of sexual harassment. WESLEY SMITH Tonight, one of Hadley's victims described her anger towards him, and her relief he'd been found guilty. She says the incident has left her nervous about driving. Keith Wilkinson reports. Video-Taped report follows SEXUAL ASSAULT VICTIM Read in studio Voice over Contaminated ham has been found on sale in dozens of supermarkets and delicatessens. The Consumers Association says some could have caused food poisoning. But three of the supermarkets involved insist that their hygiene standards are high and their own tests found no evidence of bacteria. Gargy Patel reports. Video-Taped report follows OXFORD JOHN BEISHON/Consumers' Association DONNA ALDEN/Taylors Delicatessen Voice over Home baked ham ... a favourite with shoppers at delicatessen counters. Experts say this is the right way to store and display it. Kept in clean cabinets, all surfaces regularly wiped ... and temperatures kept to below 8 degrees centigrade. But a survey by Which magazine has found that up to eighty per cent of loose ham sold in delicatessens was contaminated with bacteria. Supermarkets, including Tesco's store in Banbury and the Co-Op in Kidlington, were also found to be selling ham, which experts say had a high risk of food poisoning. Inspectors also found listeria contamination in pre-packed ham bought from Sainsbury's in Cowley. The Consumers' Association blames poor hygiene standards. Delicatessen managers say it's vital to maintain clean practices from the moment supplies come to the store. Supermarkets listed by the survey have hit back. All say their own tests showed no evidence of listeria. The Co-Op says it regularly carries testing of equipment. Staff are well trained and stores are constantly monitored by environmental health officers. Sainsbury's says it has a strict listeria code of practice and is confident that standards of hygiene are effective. But the Consumers' Association wants tougher action on food hygiene, to fully protect consumers from the risk of food poisoning . Read in studio Exactly one week after the IRA firebombed a shopping centre police have been back to the scene looking for possible witnesses. Detectives think someone may have seen the bombers as they were planting the devices. Gareth Furby reports. Video-Taped report follows MILTON KEYNES/Buckinghamshire

	WPC LISA COSH/Milton Keynes Police Det Insp MARK LOWEN/Milton Keynes Police Voice over The police do n't yet know if they're looking for an IRA gang or just one member acting alone. But today they asked regular shoppers to think back exactly one week, and some replies have been helpful. She says some shoppers think they've seen people acting, or even dressed, suspiciously. Today police released these pictures of the damage. Eight firebombs were planted but only three went off. The others were found and defused just in time. More than sixty officers are now working on the inquiry, coordinated from this incident room at Milton Keynes police station. He says if they get a good description they'll put to together an artists impression. The police are now examining at total of thirty nine video tapes, from in-store security systems, and from members of the public who were filming in or near Milton Keynes shopping centre last week. The police hope is that the IRA gang or individual responsible for this damage may be captured on film. Read in studio The government's being urged to bring in a new speed limit on one of the region's worst accident blackspots. Fifty-five people have been killed on a seventeen-mile stretch of the Oxford to Swindon road. Now campaigners and engineers are hoping new safety measures will halt the rising death toll. Kim Barnes reports. Video-Taped report follows LONGCOT/Oxfordshire JOHN WATTS/A420 Action Group ANNE MORTLOCK/Road Safety Officer GRAY PRIESTLEY/Engineer/Oxfordshire County Council Voice over This was the scene on the A 420 last June ... helping win the road its reputation as one long series of blackspots. Here, a family of three died ... last year four people from the same family died a few miles further east. Fifty-five people have been killed in the last twelve years. Campaigners say its a death trap The county council acknowledge its a dangerous road and are now urging the department of transport to take action. They believe the heavy traffic must be eased ... and forced to slow down ... Today the department of transport said only that it continues to support the council's road safety measures. But there's no hope for a fifty mile an hour limit along the whole road because some sections have already been made dual carriageway. Other improvements are also under way. But the long term aim is to make it all dual carriageway ... hopes are high the government will announce this in a couple
